

Tohoku Earthquake and Tsunami

March 11, 2011

Sendai – 5 miles inland

Minamisanriku

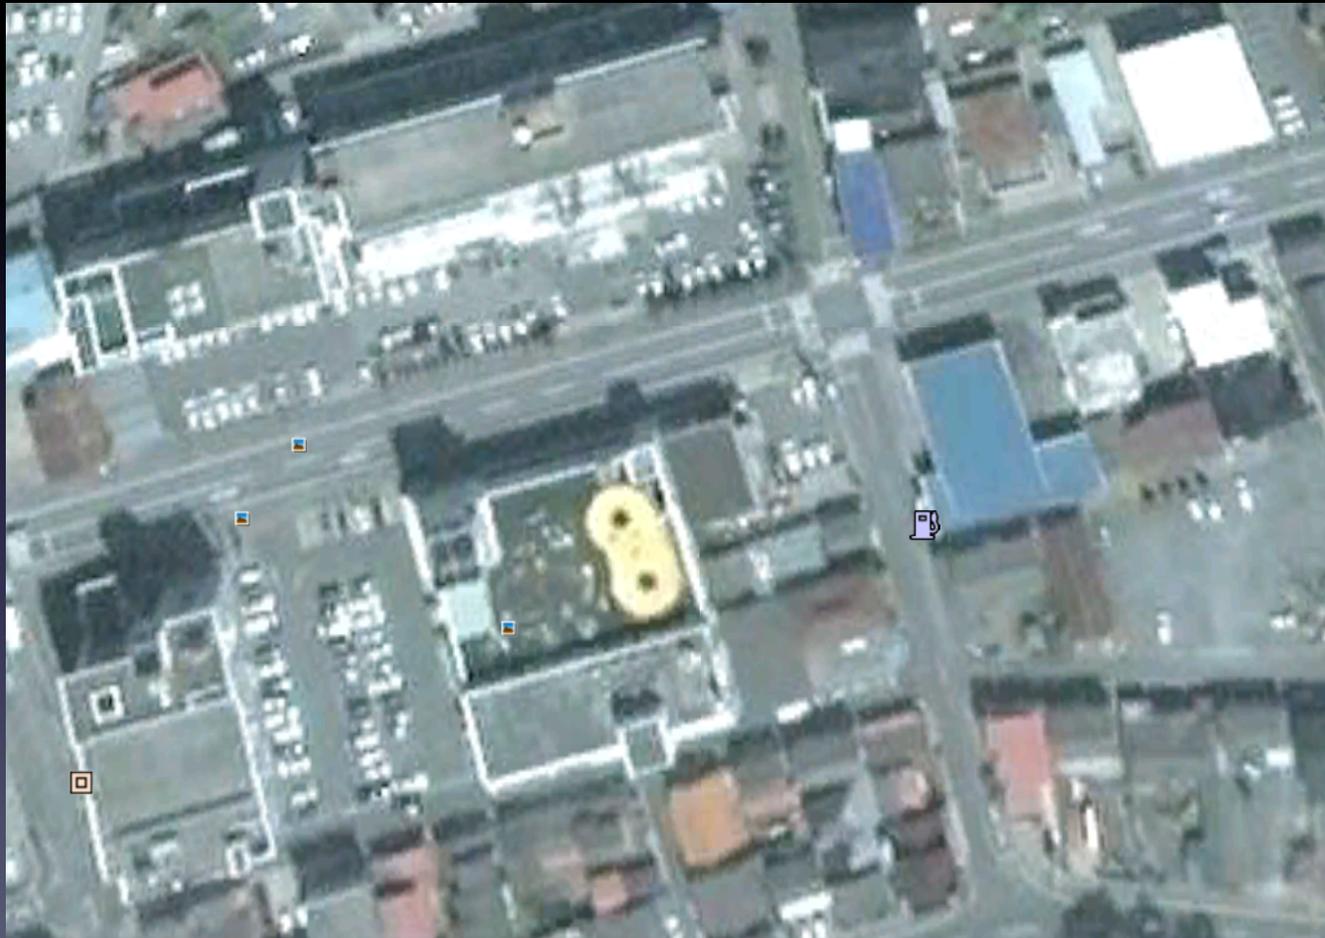

Before

2 km above

Ofunato - Before

Ofunato – March 2011

Ofunato – June 2011

Ofunato – March 2011

Ofunato – June 2011

Ofunato – March 2011

Ofunato – June 2011

Sukuiso

Miyagi

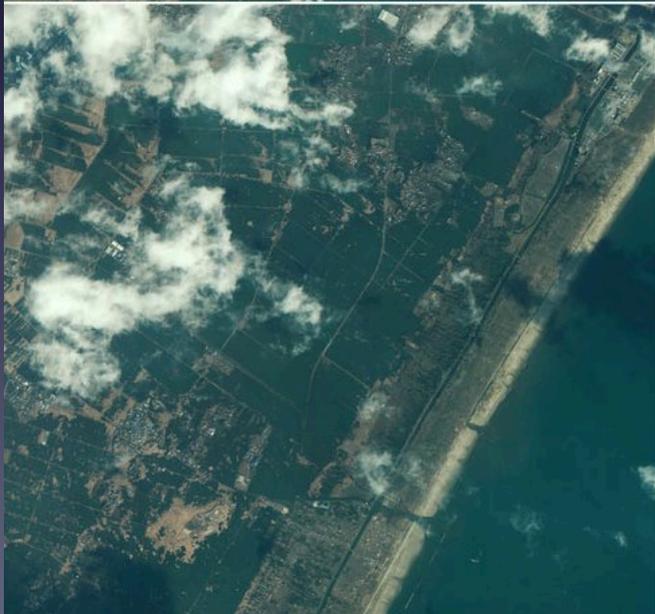

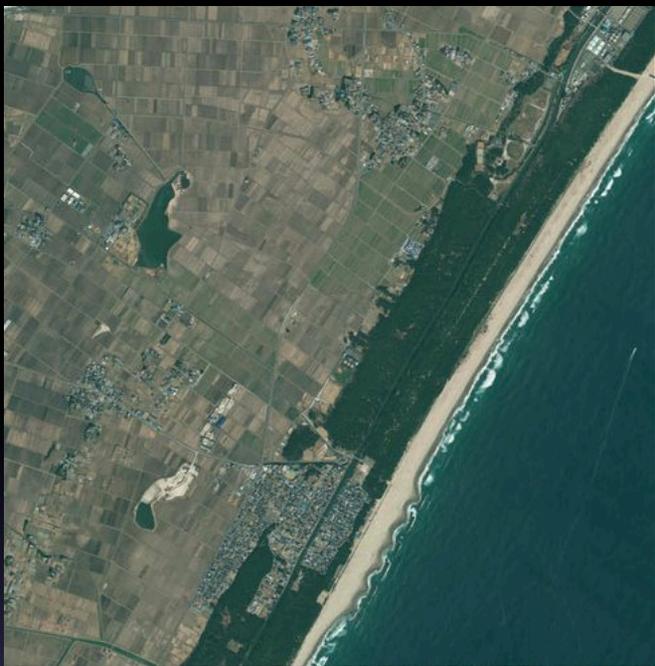

Reuters

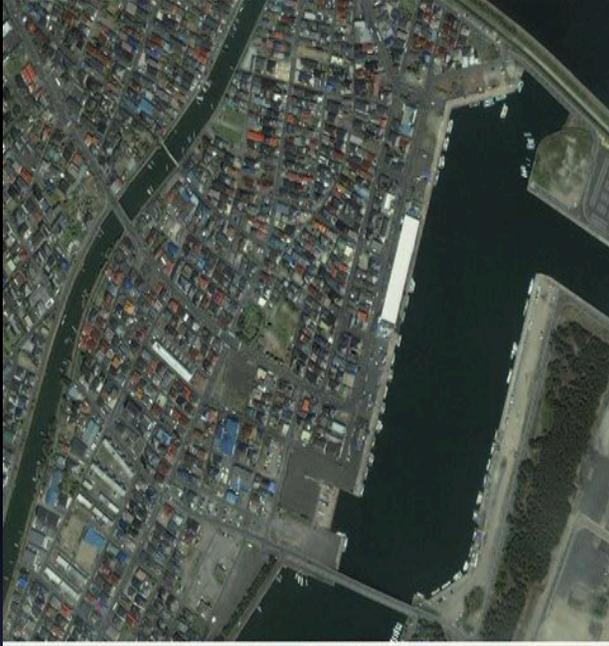

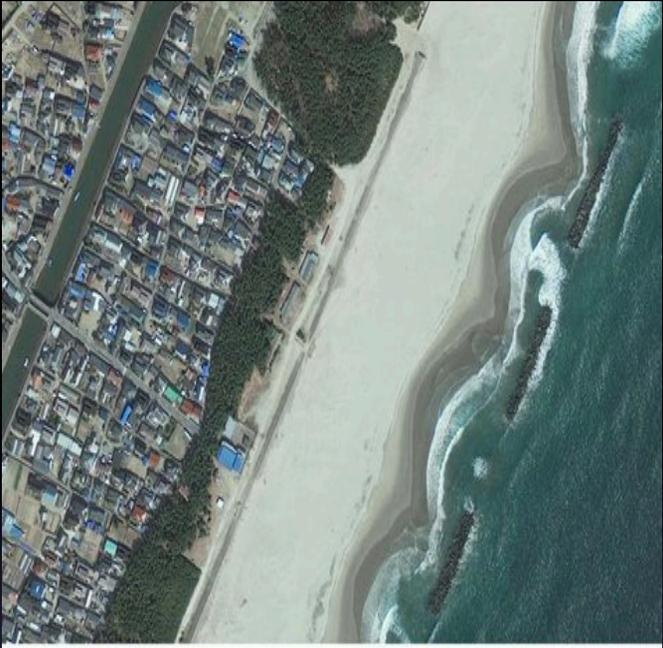

Before/After

NEWS

Japan tsunami debris could reach B.C. in days: oceanographer

Comments | Email | Twitter | LinkedIn Share 5 | +7 0 | Facebook Like 344

Postmedia News Nov 10, 2011 – 9:53 AM ET

A photo released by the International Pacific Research Center at the University of Hawaii October 24, 2011 shows a Japanese fishing boat found by a Russian ship in the northwest Pacific. A fishing boat from Fukushima and other debris have been found in the Pacific at a location suggesting that flotsam from Japan's tsunami is drifting east faster than expected, researchers say. Nadezhda Prozharina / AFP / Getty Images

By Sandra McCulloch

VICTORIA — The largest items swept out to sea following the Japanese tsunami in March could arrive on the B.C. coastline within days, oceanographer Curt Ebbesmeyer predicted on Wednesday.

Thank You and Aloha